National Service and Volunteerism

Volunteering in America

"The health of a democratic society may be measured by the quality of functions performed by private citizens"—Alexis de Tocqueville

Alexis de Tocqueville, a French observer of American life in the early 1800's, noted that, more than any other people, Americans have always volunteered to help their neighbors and their communities. Our government encourages and supports this spirit of cooperation.

National Service and Volunteerism

Over two hundred years after de Tocqueville, the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001 created a new sense of civic pride, patriotism, and gratitude for America's freedoms.

The tragic events of 9-11 crystallized the spirit of active community involvement for many Americans. As a people, we are committed to the ideal of volunteering—looking to serve our nation and our fellow citizens in new and meaningful ways.

By giving of ourselves, we demonstrate our country's greatest source of strength: An active and engaged citizenry.

We Are a Country That Serves . . . In Many Meaningful Ways
